Well this sure seems overdue doesn't it? Well known chocolate brand Max Brenner, who had had chocolate bars and cafes dotted all over Australia, are finally making a play for the Adelaide market. The international chain has not had a presence to date in the southern city despite well-known outlets in major cities like Sydney, Brisbane, and Melbourne, but that's all set to change once Rundle Street becomes home to Adelaide's very first Max Brenner Chocolate Bar.

The opening is said to take over the space that once was Eros Ouzeri, within walking distance from three other dessert cafes including Cocolat and San Churro. As indaily report, it also marks the last mainland frontier for the brand, as Max Brenner now have outlets in every major Australian state and territory except Tasmania.

Max Brenner's vast selection of products will be available as part of the bar's retail element, sitting right alongside the dine-in menu that will launch with their current winter menu, bringing in a range of chocolate pizzas, vanilla popsicles, and the current limited edition winter hot chocolates which were launched across Max Brenner on World Chocolate Day earlier this year.

No opening date for Max Brenner Rundle Street has been set, but seeing as the space is being fitted out right now we expect the street's fourth dessert cafe to launch soon! For a full list of Max Brenner locations and more information head to the official website HERE.
